

Philosophy of Education

The Biblical summary for the developmental years in the life of Christ is indeed brief, yet we believe, for all its brevity, that summary implies several significant components for an effective philosophy of Christian education: “And Jesus grew in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and men.” We believe that an effective Christian school connects people, creating a life-giving community. An effective Christian school connects the curriculum, creating a truly integrated, interdisciplinary approach to learning. An effective Christian school connects classrooms with multiple resources, thereby enriching the learning climate. Finally, an effective Christian school connects learning to life, building character through discipleship.
